

Melissa Laing is a artist, theorist and curator living in West Auckland. Her practice spans film, dialogue, sculpture, conceptual writing and artist books. Her practice is situated in the intersections of visual language, critical theory, social history and politics. Previous works have focused on the construction of insecurity through the lens of immigration and aviation. More recently she has focussed on the structures that shape how knowledge is gained and shared. Through artworks, essays and conversation groups she has engaged with the ideologies of intellectual property, practises of education, and the role of science in New Zealand. Since 2012 Melissa has been the lead researcher for the Performance Ethics Working Group, an initiative of the University Without Conditions. She has a PhD from Sydney College of Arts, University of Sydney and her writing has been published in magazines, academic journals and galleries. Currently she is the director of the Urban Walking Festival.
